

A biome is a community of living organisms of a single ecological region. A biome is determined by climate and rainfall. Vegetation adapts to the climate and rainfall. Animals adapt to the vegetation of a particular biome.

This map shows the location of four biomes in North America.

